Clinical Informatics from Zero to Hero

Everyday healthcare organization leaders, clinical informaticists, and IT analysts face the unenviable task of designing and building efficient, usable, and relevant clinical workflows within their EHRs, which places the focus on their patients and clinicians. Many organizations make the common mistake of focusing the majority of their money, resources and time on designing and building clinical content without a clear plan to achieve their desired state. This focus on the initial implementation with all associated costs takes the focus away from the most important reason for implementing an EHR in the first place, the meaningful use of patient information to drive better care and outcomes.
